A Challenge for Bookstores

Over the past few years, many bookstores in the United States and Europe have been having a hard time staying in business. More and more people have started buying books on the Internet, and new technologies such as electronic books have become very popular. (36), the number of books sold in bookstores has gone down, and many small bookshops have had to close. However, some bookstores are finding new ways to attract customers.

Some of these bookstores now sell coffee and have places where customers can sit and relax. Others have started to sell items like wine or children's toys along with the books. One bookshop owner in Massachusetts began offering Spanish classes in his store. Another bookseller rents the space in his store to people that want to have parties. However, many bookstore owners do not like these (37). They say that using them does not actually help the stores to sell their main product — books.

Now, there might be a new way to help bookstores. Researchers from Hasselt University in Belgium did an experiment on smells in bookstores. They found that when the smell of chocolate is in the air, people take their time and look at more books. In their experiment, the sales of popular genres such as romance novels and books about food and drink went up by 40 percent when the store used the smell. The experiment suggests that this could be an inexpensive way to help bookstores stay (38).

From: Greg Banks <g-banks@stylemail.com>
To: Sylvia Herman <sylvia2003@newstepmail.com>
Date: June 8, 2014
Subject: Nice to see you again

Hi Sylvia,

It was nice seeing you at David's party last Saturday! I can't believe it has already been a year since he started his own company. The party was a great chance to see the people that we went to business school with, and I thought the food that David's wife prepared was delicious.

At the party, you said you were thinking about taking yoga classes. Well, my friend Kristina is a fitness instructor at the community center near your house. She said that the yoga class for beginners is held every Monday evening from 7:30 to 8:30. Each class only costs $10. If you're interested in signing up, I can send you Kristina's e-mail address.

Also, I was hoping you could give me some advice. I'm planning a trip to Germany this September. I remember you said that your uncle lives there and that you often visit him. Could you suggest some places for me to visit? I'm interested in food, art, and history, but I only want to go to one or two museums. I heard that many Germans can speak English, but I might take German lessons anyway to prepare for my trip. I'm very excited!

All the best,
Greg

Geese Police

For thousands of years, people have used guard dogs to protect their homes. This is because dogs have good hearing and bark loudly when strangers are near. However, criminals have found many ways to avoid being caught by guard dogs, such as giving them food with drugs in it. Because of this, police in an area of China called Xinjiang have started using a different animal for guarding places — geese.*

The Chinese police are using geese to help guard police stations at night. These birds are actually good at protecting places because they have very good hearing and can see much better than people can. They can also be very noisy, and it is difficult to calm them down once they have started making noise. For instance, when a man quietly tried to steal a motorbike from a police station in Xinjiang, a group of 20 guard geese began screaming and woke up a police officer. The officer then caught the man.

Zhang Quansheng, the chief of police for Shawan County in Xinjiang, says that he thinks geese are better at guarding than dogs. This is because geese are kept in large numbers, so it is difficult for a criminal to kill or give drugs to all of the geese in a short time. Also, if a criminal tries to give the geese food, they get more excited and become noisier. Dogs, on the other hand, become quiet.

Another advantage of using geese is that they are easy to take care of. They do not need expensive food, and they usually do not fly away from their homes. According to Patrick Cumins, a bird expert, some farmers in the United States are also using geese to protect chickens. However, even though geese are good at guarding, they are not able to replace dogs for other jobs, such as helping the blind.

*goose : ガチョウ (複数形 : geese)

- (42) What is one problem with using dogs to guard places?
- 1 Their hearing is not very good.
 - 2 Their owners do not notice them barking.
 - 3 They are usually too friendly.
 - 4 They can be given food with drugs.
- (43) What happened when a man tried to steal a motorbike in Xinjiang?
- 1 Guard geese helped the police to stop him from doing it.
 - 2 Guard geese heard him even though the dogs could not.
 - 3 He screamed loudly and woke up the guard geese.
 - 4 He was unable to see where the guard geese were kept.
- (44) If a criminal gives food to guard geese, they
- 1 might become nicer towards the criminal.
 - 2 might fall asleep very quickly.
 - 3 will gather into large groups.
 - 4 will start to make more noise.
- (45) How are geese being used in the United States?
- 1 To replace dogs as popular pets.
 - 2 To protect chickens on farms.
 - 3 To guard food in homes from other animals.
 - 4 To help blind people to find their way around.
