Challenges for Children

Many people have memories of playing in playgrounds at parks. Some children like climbing on jungle gyms while others like the slides or swings. However, from the 1990s, more and more people began to think that playgrounds were too dangerous. As a result, many cities in the United States began to (28). In these new playgrounds, the climbing bars were lower, and the ground was softer. As a result, there were fewer chances for children to get hurt.

Even so, some people do not think that such changes are good for children. Ellen Sandseter, a professor at Queen Maud University College in Norway, says that playgrounds help children to grow. For example, when children try to climb to a high place, they often feel afraid. However, they keep trying to climb to high places. As a result, (29), they start to feel less scared. This shows that when children try difficult things by themselves again and again, they can learn not to be afraid. Sandseter believes that modern playgrounds do not have enough challenges.

This causes a problem for parents. They want their children to face challenges and learn new things, but they also do not want their children to get hurt. Hoping to solve this problem, local governments in the United States have started (30) for playgrounds. They hope to build playgrounds that will provide exciting and fun challenges for children in a safe environment.

From: Kelly Applebee <kelly-applebee@hemcast.net>

To: John Coleman <j-coleman97@linenet.com>

Date: January 21

Subject: Math test

Hi John,

Did you have fun practicing soccer this morning? I heard your team is going to play a big game this Friday. Are you ready for it? I think I'll be free that evening, so I might go and watch it with my brother. I hope you win!

Anyway, I wanted to ask you about our math test next week. I did really poorly on the last test, so I want to study hard and get a good grade on the next one. I remember you said you are having trouble in math class, so would you like to study together? I have some free time on Sunday. So, why don't we meet at the library?

If you are free, we could also do something fun afterward. There's a new movie at the Palace Theater this week called The Man from Mars. It's a science-fiction movie about an astronaut who goes to live on Mars for a year. When he comes back to Earth, everyone is gone, and he tries to find out what happened. Anyway, let me know what you think, and good luck getting ready for the game!

Your friend,

Kelly

The Recycled Orchestra

In wealthy countries like the United States and Japan, recycling is a popular way to protect the environment. However, in many poorer countries, recycling is an important way for people to make money. Adults and children look through garbage to find metal and other valuable things to sell. In this way, they can make just enough money to pay for food and housing. In South America, there are towns where many of the people make their money by doing this. One such place is Cateura, Paraguay.

Life in Cateura is sometimes difficult. Families have little money, and most children have to quit school and start working when they are still young. However, a man named Favio Chavez has been trying to make their lives better. Chavez moved to Cateura in 2006 and soon started to offer music lessons to children in the area. These lessons became very popular, but he did not have enough musical instruments for all of them to practice with.

Chavez decided to work with local people to make new musical instruments using garbage collected in the town. First, he worked with Nicolas Gomez to create violins and guitars using old salad bowls and forks. Then, with Tito Romero, he created clarinets using bottle caps, spoons, and buttons. With hard work and care, the men were able to create instruments that sounded like the real ones.

Chavez was able to teach hundreds of children in Cateura how to play instruments. Now, many of the children play in an orchestra called the Recycled Orchestra. They have the chance to travel to different countries to give performances, and they use the money that they make to pay for school and to support their families. Thanks to the Recycled Orchestra, the children and their families now have a better future to look forward to.

- (34) Why is recycling important in many poorer countries?
- 1 It is the cheapest way to help protect the environment.
 - 2 It is a way for people to make the money they need to live.
 - 3 It can help keep towns there clean.
 - 4 It can help stop people from making garbage.
- (35) When Favio Chavez moved to Cateura,
- 1 the town did not have a school for children.
 - 2 the town did not have many families living there.
 - 3 he began to teach children there to play music.
 - 4 he was too busy to give music lessons anymore.
- (36) How did Chavez get musical instruments?
- 1 He used the money that he received from parents to buy new ones.
 - 2 He sold things that he did not need to get money to buy them.
 - 3 He asked local people to give him old ones that they did not use.
 - 4 He worked with local people to make them from garbage.
- (37) Children in the Recycled Orchestra
- 1 are able to travel and to help their families.
 - 2 have to pay money to take part in the group.
 - 3 ask their schools to help them buy musical instruments.
 - 4 go to other countries to teach other children to play music.
