_While there may be times when it seems it would be good to silence certain people, the methods used for restricting that speech are very easily abused so we must be careful how and when restrictions happen. _Free speech allows all ideas to be heard and debated so that the bad ideas can be discarded. If the prevailing ideas are bad, then they must be criticized so that they can be fixed or replaced. Of course, those who benefit from bad ideas will want to silence any debate so they can continue to benefit. _There are times when speech can be used not to debate or critique ideas, but rather in order to sway people to immediate drastic action such as panic or violence. This might be a legitimate time to restrict free speech. _There is also the problem of people using speech in order to spread false notions in order to trick or fool people to benefit themselves. People often do not investigate whether something they have been told is true, especially if it plays on their emotions. But any attempt to silence such people will leave the enforcement of the truth in biased hands and will cause others to be silenced for simply unpopular but true ideas. Thus, restriction in this case causes more harm than good. _This is why I think it is better not to try to restrict free speech except in cases where it would lead to immediate violence, but rather to try to counter bad ideas and falsehoods wherever they may arise rather than trying to stop people from expressing them. 267words
