There are already many jobs that computers and robot do that were once done by humans. This has had many negative effects on the economy. But, I think it is only going to get worse.

As technology improves, robots and computer systems will only get cheaper and cheaper compared to human labor. After all, one only needs to make a one-time purchase to have a system that will do the job for many years. The machines can work almost non-stop and will not get distracted. And it is generally easier to repair a machine than a hurt or injured worker.

Right now, robots are probably better at doing any job that requires staying in one place and making something with one's hands. They aren't so good at repair work as they have trouble identifying things that are damaged. Computers also have serious problems with work that requires social communication with people. Also, robots can't really do jobs that require them to go to different places to accomplish their tasks. However, all three of these weaknesses of computers is quickly being overcome. Great advancements are being made in computer learning and there are even self-driving cars being developed. If computers can adapt to unexpected and changing road conditions, they will be able to analyze and adapt to other situations as well and will quickly be able to do those jobs they currently cannot. This seems an inevitable result of technology, but it is going to create a lot of problems for people. Right now, people receive their income for living through employment in work. But once no work need be done by humans, what will become of all those who no longer have jobs to do? 285words
