__No, I do not agree that work is the most important thing in people's lives. People work to make money in order to live their life. Living to work is a misguided venture. __I mainly believe this because human beings are living things. Every living thing competes to live and pass its genes on to the next generation. The most successful living things are those that have successful offspring, especially many successful offspring. Having children and raising them to be successful and be able to have their own children is the most important thing a person can do. __Of course, even if one's genes don't make it to future generations, a person can still affect the world by having their ideas and works make it into the future. There are many people whose ideas have far greater legacies than their offspring. However, unless your career is one that could have such a positive impact on the world then this is unlikely to happen. __There are also people who are content to leave no legacy behind, but instead simply wish to enjoy the time they have in life. But almost no workers find their jobs enjoyable, even those who do activities they do enjoy at work, the enjoyment is often lost when one is required to do it every day. __For what is important in life, there are very few people whose lives get much meaning from work. It is far more important in one's life to make a family, change the world or just enjoy the short lives we have. Those who focus their whole lives on work are sure to regret it one day. (275 words)
