_I don't think newspapers are particularly relevant in today's times and they were always not the best way to get good or accurate information. _While newspaper reports work hard, newspapers sell on the basis of being the first to report on a story and push the most dramatic news of the day. They are also limited on space. This means that there often isn't enough time to fully explore a story nor the room in a newspaper to get the details. Once the newspaper is printed, there is no taking back mistakes written in the piece and while a follow-up or retraction can be printed, they often don't get much attention. Another reason newspaper aren't a very good way to get information is because of how they are by necessity organized. If you want to find out about previous events, you will need to know what day the event took place and then search the newspapers during the week after to get any information. The way they are formatted just doesn't lend itself to easy searching. The internet has rendered newspapers all but obsolete. With internet news, one can look up information on events quite easily, the articles can be as long as they need to be in order to fully explore the subject and if any mistakes are made in the initial writing of the article, they can be corrected. Particularly sites like Wikipedia are the best way to get up-to-date and accurate information on a particular topic. That is why I prefer them over newspapers.
