_I don't think radio is necessarily more enjoyable nor practical than TV. While radio has some advantages, I think it is too limited. _One of radio's advantages is that it can be listened to while doing other things. However, this is because radio does not fully occupy one's attention. One is likely to do something else to entertain themselves while simultaneously listening to the radio. This shows that it is less entertaining than TV. _Radio also doesn't have the ability to produce images. It is said that a picture is worth a thousand words, and radio is limited to words and sounds without pictures. While television does not always use its image in the best way, radio is generally limited to music and basic news or debate only, because its limitations mean it cannot convey nearly as much information to a person. _Finally, while there was a time in the past that radio could be said to be more portable than TV, newer technology has rendered this advantage obsolete. Now one can both listen to the radio and watch TV wherever they are on the common smartphone that nearly everyone possesses. Unless one is in a situation where power or cell signal is limited, there is now no more advantage radio has over television. _So while there are certain places and times when it is best to use radio, I don't think it could at all be described as more enjoyable nor practical than TV. Anything radio format could do, a television format could do better, and what advantages radio had even 10 years ago have been entirely lost. 269words
